THE SOCIAL WORLD

Another Interesting Week in Washington in May.

THE MISTRESS OF THE WHITE HOUSE

ninutes for the socially favored. Entertainment has been continuous and delightin town and occasional gatherings of a similar nature at suburban homes and resorts, the time has been quickly passed in most congenial surroundings, and society as a rule, unless trips abroad are contemplated, looks forward with renewed interest to another month of everyday intercourse nere, before separating for the summer.

The accounts of the gorgeous clothes vorn by the Washington matrons and maids at court of St. James, at the last two drawing rooms, elicited great admiration among their friends here in reading the very brief description of the imposing scenes in which the clothes and their fair owners participated. Now when the let-scenes in which the clothes and their fair owners participated. Now when the letters commence to come this way with a detailed account of what these favored individuals underwent in the way of fatigue, as well as enjoyment in kissing the hand of royalty, the story of the spring presentations will be the better appreciated.

The square H street between Connecticut avenue and 16th street will be soon forlorn enough after its brilliant history of the past four years. The Brices are still here, and everybody hopes will be in no hurry to leave, but the Lamont house and the Hay house are closed. Secretary and Mrs. Alger were anxious to get settled in their permanent home, the Hazen nouse, and moved over there over a week ago.

There has been a splendid opportunity for the display of summer there at the afternoon teas and garden parties lately, and the chance has not been wasted. The becomingness of fresh and dainty toilets in silks and airy organdies is well understood, and the idea that the new styles were never so pretty is general and would be hard to gainsay. The Brice and British embassy garden parties were especially remarkable for the beauty and daintiness of the new dreases and hats, and gave to many of the less fortunate guests ideas by the dezens to utilize in the construction of their summer outfits. Having two or three light and effective costumes on hand at this early season, when dressmakers are overworked, and best customers must bide their time, shows a looking ahead which was an immense advantage over others who were content with less early preparation.

Mrs. McKinley received by appointment

Mrs. McKinley received by appointment yesterday afternoon a number of callers from 3 to 4. They were received in the library, where the mistress of the White House was seated near a south window. She was looking unusually well, handsomely gowned in mauve brocade, trimmed with a deeper shade of velvet. Mrs. Saxton, Miss Sickles and Miss Gary assisted in entertaining the callers, who came in groups throughout the hour. Mrs. McKinley has greatly enjoyed the cool weather this spring, but does not anticipate with any dread the warm weather, for she rather likes it, and will be quite content to remain here until the President can go away with her.

The Short, Story Club Wednesday evening held its last regular meeting of the season. Its parlors in the Lenman building were crowded by members and friends. The entire work of this club, with the exception of choice music occasionally, has been presented by club members. Seventeen original stories, ten essays, twenty-three articles and fourteen poems, with book reviews and literary items of interest, has formed the season's work. The program of Wednesday night, which was greatly enjoyed, was as follows: Original story, "The New Woman," by Miss Ella Padon; original poem, by Mr. Clifford Howard, sung by Mrs. Howard to her own music. A story in four chapters, by the following members, caused great applause: First chapter, Mrs. E. F. Hort; second chapter, Miss Augusta Pratt; third chapter, Mrs. Jean B. Lockwood. Recitations, by Mrs. Hort and Mrs. Lockwood, and songs, by Mrs. Howard, closed the evening. A book carnival, by the club, was announced for next Wednesday evening.

ained on their arrival as the guests of Mr. Jefferson Monticello Levy, the present pro rietor of the famous country seat. The mayor of Charlottesville and eption committee, representing the tens, of which Mr. Levy was chairman, met the party at the train, and they were triven in carriages from the depot to Monticello. The trip had been suggested by ticello. The trip had been suggested by senator Hoar, and the arrangements did not contemplate entertainment at Monticello beyond the privilege of viewing the historic home of Jefferson, but in the bounteousness of his hospitality Mr. Levy, who has preserved and cared for the property in a way that should earn him the graintude of the millions of admirers of Jefferson, entertained the party at hunch, served under the raighty trees which Jefferson planted. The guests were received by Mr. Levy and his sister, Mrs. Rittenburg, assisted by Mr. H. L. Lyman, an old friend of the owner of Menticello, and his neighbor. The party was shown through the mansion, after which wine was served in the dining room from the old Jefferson stdeboard. Later small tables were placed under the trees, where light refreshments sideboard. Later small tables were placed under the trees, where light refreshments and punch made up the menu.
